Hi Zihaad,

I hope you are well.

Please see my formative respond below:

- Your content is set out to an appropriate academic standard, using the correct font, line spacing and font size
- For formative it is fine to use bullet points, but for any written summative assignment you engage with ensure that you avoid 'listing' strategies to convey your information. Listing, [for example bullet points, numbered paragraphs etc] lends itself to a more descriptive interpretation of research. Writing in full paragraphs allows a more comparative and debate based discussion to take place, comparing one point of research to another and so do take this on board for future formative/summative
- You have completed appropriate research in answer to the formative question
- There is solid and factual discussion in your response
- Citation takes place. Just a comment to bear in mind for summative; take every opportunity to cite in summative and so where there is a fact cite
- There is an appropriate amount of references reflecting in-text citation for your formative
- Good reflection of industry and personal professional standards in line with ethics and GDPR considerations

With best wishes
